

The statues of the Buddhist disciples in Chung Chu Temple: The temple is thirty kilometers at the outskirts of Kunming in Yu An Hill. It was erected during the Tseng Kuan period (627 A. D.) of Tang Dynasty, and repaired during the Years of Hsuan Teh of Ming Dynasty. In the temple, there are five hundred statues of Arhan, the disciples of Buddha.

Chin Shan Sze (Gold Mountain Temple): Chin Shan (Gold Mountain) is so named because gold was found while the monk pei started building the temple there. Chin Shan Sze, also called Chiang Tien Sze, is of a vast structure which, unfortunately, was ruined by fire many times. Higher up from the Temple is the Chiang Tien I Lan Ting (Lofty View Pavilion) and standing steeply by is the Tzu ShouTa,

(a pagoda) looking out from whose top, the distant mountain sceneries and the Vast river views seem to be within an elbow's reach. South of the Pagoda is the Fa Hai Tung (a cave) in which is hung the image of Fa Hai, a legendary figure of widespread fame in connection with the "white-snake" fairy tales, (The Reference Dept.)
